One of the fascinating results of the Zero Survey (<https://spor.com.au/zero-vision-survey/>) is responses to the first statement: 'Humans are fallible, mortal and the world is random'. With over 350 respondents 4% deny this statement. My expectation was that this opening statement would get 100% agreement, in many ways a motherhood-type statement. So as each survey form comes in I look at the 15 results that deny this statement and wonder, surely you can't affirm the opposite?
