Of course, the boxes vary according to the type of book I'm reading but the principal remains the same. With 'Others', Herbert not only ticked all my boxes, he filled them in with black permanent marker! James Herbert is a master at the opening line, and this one has a belter: a single paragraph, "My redemption began in Hell."

Others by James Herbert - Goodreads
Author of such classic chilling tales as The Fog and The Rats, Britain's foremost horror master James Herbert now cleverly transcends the boundaries of detective fiction and the supernatural for Others, a book that begins in the bowels of Hell. In this fiery underworld we meet a former Hollywood movie star, thrust there for a lifetime of depravity.

I'm doing something a little bit different this time and featuring a slightly more recent book that I just read for the first time: Others, by James Herbert. First published in 1999, Others begins with a premise that would seem to belong to Clive Barker more than James Herbert. An actor from Old Hollywood is in Hell and has been suffering for some time.

But as a piece of writing, "Others" is, as usual for Herbert, ablutely diabolical in terms of writing and fluency. Told through the eyes of a disabled private investigator, "Others" can be viewed - as some have chosen to see it - as a wider piece of fiction on how society treats people who are different from the norm.

I loved Others by James Herbert a lot. It was a gripping, disturbing action packed book full of believable characters. The reader was good, but back in the early 2000s I bought the abridged version on cassette read by Robert Powell and I honestly think that he was a better reader with more expression and better voices than the bloke who read the unabridged version.
